I felt hesitant and nervous before making the phone call to uncle, even contemplating whether to dial the number for about 15 minutes. There were moments when I almost disconnected the call before it even rang, but eventually, I made the call and uncle answered. I anxiously inquired about his plans regarding his son’s schooling, to which he asked for my advice.

We engaged in a conversation that lasted around 15 minutes, and I found uncle to be incredibly calm and friendly. It was the first time I had discussed such matters with my friend’s parents, and I rarely felt as comfortable talking to my own parents as I did with uncle. His kindness left a lasting impression on me.
